1 INTRODUCTION

The Twofold Bay Naval Ammunitioning Facility (NAF) involves the staged construction of a vessel turning basin, wharf and jetty on the southern side of Twofold Bay (within East Boyd Bay), opposite the town of Eden in southern NSW (Figure 1-1). The first stage of works involved dredging approximately 170,000m^3 of material from the seabed of East Boyd Bay within the boundary of the turning basin, which adjoins the proposed wharf (Figure 1-2). Principal contractors Baulderstone Hornibrook Ltd awarded the dredging contract to the Port of Brisbane Corporation. Baulderstone Hornibrook Ltd is responsible for further stages of work involving construction of the wharf and jetty.

It was estimated that approximately 4 - 6 weeks would be required for completion of the dredging contract using the trailing-arm, suction dredge, the 'Brisbane'. The aim of the dredging programme was to attain a design bed level of –11 m AHD within the turning basin. Disposal of the material removed from East Boyd Bay was at an offshore placement area situated 3 nautical miles east of Eden. Representations from local commercial fishers resulted in an extension to the designated placement area so as to provide a greater buffer between placement operations and inshore trawling areas. The offshore placement area was 3 nautical miles long by 1.5 nautical miles wide.

Environmental monitoring was a key component of the dredging contract being administered by the Port of Brisbane Corporation. Modelling done for the EIS predicted that the impacts of the dredging operation would largely be confined to the area of East Boyd Bay. Importantly, studies done as part of the EIS identified areas of seagrass, particularly strapweed (Posidonia australis), within East Boyd Bay and recommended measures to mitigate the effects of the proposed works on seagrasses including monitoring during construction and operational phases of the project. Furthermore, it was recommended that water quality, primarily turbidity, and photosynthetically active radiation (PAR) be monitored during the dredging programme.

WBM Oceanics Australia Pty Ltd was commissioned by the Port of Brisbane Corporation to undertake monitoring of the water quality within East Boyd Bay during the dredging of the turning basin for the Twofold Bay NAF. Specifically, WBM Oceanics Australia aimed to:

- Deploy subtidal water quality loggers adjacent to the proposed dredging operation to measure natural levels of turbidity in the weeks prior to the commencement of dredging;
- Deploy real-time turbidity buoys to monitor levels of turbidity at each of 7 locations adjacent to the dredging operation in East Boyd Bay and establish a receiving station at the site office of Baulderstone Hornibrook;
- Monitor current direction, water quality and spoil plume dispersal at the offshore placement area at the commencement of dredging operations;
- Examine levels of turbidity and PAR at each of 7 locations adjacent to the dredging operation in East Boyd Bay; and
- Examine the assemblage of fouling biota attached to the hull of the dredge 'Brisbane'.

2 STUDY METHODS

2.1 Dredging Operations in East Boyd Bay

2.1.1 Water Quality

Water quality measurements were collected using each of 2 Yeokal 612 water quality instruments in that were deployed in a 2 – 4 week period prior to the commencement of dredging. These instruments were deployed by divers and positioned approximately 0.5 m above the seabed adjacent to the 2 beds of Posidonia in East Boyd Bay during March 2002. Each water quality meter was programmed to record and measure a range of water quality variables every 0.5 hours. These variables included water temperature (°C), conductivity (mS/cm), salinity (g/L), dissolved oxygen (mg/L and % saturation), pH, redox (mV) and turbidity (NTU).

2.1.2 Real-time Monitoring of Turbidity

A component of the environmental monitoring programme in East Boyd Bay comprised the real-time monitoring of turbidity using an array of 7 buoys each equipped with on-board turbidity measuring, transmitting and data-logging equipment (Figure 2-1 and Figure 2-2). Two buoys were deployed adjacent to the beds of Posidonia in East Boyd Bay (Sites P1 and P2) with the remainder placed along each of 2 lines with increasing distance away from the dredging works, i.e. a line of effect close to dredging (Z1 and Z2) and a line of defence between the dredging and the beds of seagrass (M1 – M3) (Table 2-1). Sites Z1 and Z2 were located approximately 150 m from the dredging operation while Sites M1 – M3 extended in an arc approximately 100 - 150 m south east of Z1 and Z2. Levels of turbidity were measured and recorded every 15 minutes at the shore receiving station as well as being logged internally within each buoy. The real-time turbidity data was transmitted to the site office and monitored 24 hours a day by staff of Baulderstone Hornibrook.

2.1.3 Photosynthetically Active Radiation within East Boyd Bay

To examine the effects of dredging on light reduction within East Boyd Bay during the dredging programme, levels of photosynthetically active radiation (PAR) were measured at the seabed with 2π ODYSSEY photosynthetic photon flux density (PPFD) sensors. A PPFD sensor was deployed adjacent to each of the sites selected for the real time turbidity monitoring (see Table 2-1). Each sensor was mounted on a steel frame with a float-line to the surface to facilitate locating, cleaning and downloading of the data from sensors (Figure 2-3). PPFD measurements were recorded at each of the 7 buoy locations, as well as 2 above-surface reference locations. At location M2, a PPFD sensor was also positioned approximately 2 m above the seabed to allow calculation of the light attenuation coefficient (Kd). Light measurements were recorded at 15 minute intervals prior to, during and following the completion of the dredging programme.

2.1.4 Tidal Currents within East Boyd Bay

Tidal currents within East Boyd Bay were recorded prior to the commencement of dredging using an InterOcean s4 current meter. The meter was deployed approximately 150 m east of the turning basin (Figure 1-2). Measurements of current speed, direction and water depth were recorded every 6 minutes (0.1 hours) throughout the period 24/3/02 to 24/4/02.

2.2 Current and Water Quality at the Offshore Placement Area

Current speed and direction and turbidity measurements were collected at the offshore placement area on the 24 - 25/4/02 coinciding with placement operations. Placement sub-areas utilised by the 'Brisbane' on both dates were situated toward the seaward (eastern) extremity of the placement area.

Dredged material was placed at the north-eastern end of the placement area on the 24/4/2002 and at the south-eastern end of the placement area on the 25/4/2002.

2.2.1 Current Speed and Direction

Measurements of current speed and direction were collected using a vessel mounted RDI 300 kHz Acoustic Doppler Current Profiler (ADCP). Current measurements were collected from a central location within the offshore placement area prior to any measurements within the plume of placed material. Current speed and direction were recorded by the ADCP in 4 m increments through the water column. Maximum water depth at the offshore placement area was approximately 65 - 68 m. Current speed, direction and backscatter intensity were measured on a complete pass across the plume of placed material.

2.2.2 Water Quality

Measurements of water quality parameters, primarily turbidity, were collected through the depth profile using a Yeokal Model 612 Water Quality Analyser. The water turbidity (and other water quality parameters) were measured by lowering the Yeokal water quality instrument through the water column once the centre of the plume had been located using the backscatter signal from the ADCP.

2.2.3 Visual Observations of Plume Dispersal

Aerial observations to examine the behaviour of the placed material were done on the 24/4/02. A Cessna 172 was chartered from Merimbula Air Services to make observations of the placement operations from an altitude of approximately 1500 feet. A GPS was used to record the position of the operation so that observations could be made of any plume that remained after placement operations had ceased. Further observations at the offshore placement area were undertaken approximately 1 hour following the placement of the dredged material.

2.3 Inspection of Hull of Brisbane

The assemblage of biota attached to the hull of the 'Brisbane' was sampled by scuba divers on 24/4/02. At the time of the inspection, the dredge was moored on the starboard-side at the wharf in Eden, thus, it was only possible to inspect the port-side of the dredge. A visual inspection was made of the hull at three separate areas along the length of the dredge, i.e. the bow, mid-ships and the stern of the ship including the propellers. Observations were made of the underside and the side of the hull. Underwater photographic equipment was used to record any features or fouling organisms of interest.

Samples of biota, e.g. barnacles and algae, occurring at each of the 3 areas along the hull were collected using a paint scraper and placed into labelled plastic bags. Each sample was then transferred into labelled containers and preserved with 10% formalin prior to shipment to the laboratory for identification. All samples were identified to the lowest taxonomic resolution possible. Some samples were sent to the Queensland Museum for formal identification.

3 RESULTS

3.1 Dredging Operations in East Boyd Bay

Dredging within East Boyd Bay commenced at approximately 0830 hours on 23/4/2002 and ceased at approximately 1130 hours on the 14/5/02. In total, the dredge operated for 22 days within the bay completing 99 trips to the offshore placement area.

3.1.1 Water Quality

The water quality records from each of the Yeokal water quality loggers are illustrated in Figure 3-1 to Figure 3-6. The period of records illustrated mainly represents water attributes at each seagrass site prior to dredging. At location P1, approximately 1 month of water quality data was obtained between 24/3/02 and 24/4/02. At location P2, the water quality measurement period was between 4/4/02 and 23/4/02. The water quality instruments were each situated approximately 0.5 m above the seabed adjoining the seaward edge of the beds of Posidonia at Sites P1 and P2.

In the weeks prior to dredging, turbidity at Sites P1 and P2 generally ranged from 1 to 5 NTU and 1 to 9 NTU, respectively (Fig. 3-6). Greatest levels of turbidity, i.e. 29 and 23 NTU at Sites P1 and P2, respectively, were recorded during several days of high rainfall (Table 3-1). Levels of turbidity were elevated slightly (range of 5 to 10 NTU) following the commencement of dredging on 23/4/02 but were within the range of turbidity measured previously.

3.1.2 Real Time Monitoring of Turbidity

The results of monitoring of levels of turbidity for each of the reporting periods are detailed in each of the weekly monitoring reports contained in Appendix A. Briefly, the first reporting period from the 23/3/02 to the 25/4/02 included data collected by water quality loggers and real-time turbidity buoys prior to the commencement of dredging (i.e. a limited snapshot of background levels) and the initial stages of the dredging programme. Levels of turbidity in East Boyd Bay were considered low prior to the commencement of dredging (Figure 3-7 and Figure 3-8). Following the start of dredging, mean levels of turbidity generally remained in the range of 8 to 12 NTU, which was considered to be within the background range of turbidity for East Boyd Bay (WBM 2002a). For the second reporting period (25/4/02 – 1/5/02), mean levels of turbidity were greatest at the line of effect (Z1 and Z2) compared to the sites along the line of defence (M1 and M2) and adjacent to the beds of Posidonia (P1 and P2). When mean levels of turbidity were within the range of 25 – 40 NTU at Sites Z1 and Z2, the mean levels of turbidity at the Posidonia sites were generally within the range of 8 – 14 NTU (WBM 2002b). Mean levels of turbidity remained greatest at the line of effect and at the line of defence compared to the sites adjacent to the beds of Posidonia during the third (1/5/02 – 7/5/02) and fourth (7/5/02 – 14/5/02) reporting periods (WBM 2002c, 2002d). The raw data from each of the monitoring buoys is included in Appendix B.

3.1.3 Photosynthetically Active Radiation within East Boyd Bay

The results of the PPFD measurements at all locations are illustrated in Figure 3-9. Elevated levels of turbidity were recorded in the period immediately prior to the commencement of dredging (Figure 3-9), consequently, levels of light reaching the Posidonia at Site P1 were reduced to approximately 10 – 13% of incident light. Similarly, approximately 12 - 15% of the PAR recorded at the water surface was recorded at the seabed at Site P2 during the limited period that data were collected prior to dredging. During dredging, levels of PAR near the bed of Posidonia were reduced to approximately 5% and 3% of incident light at Sites P1 and P2, respectively. Following dredging, the attenuation of PAR returned gradually to the levels of incident light recorded prior to the commencement of dredging. The light attenuation coefficient (Kd), calculated for Site M2 only, was equivalent to approximately 0.20 using base 10 logarithms (0.25 using natural logarithms) prior to dredging and increased to an average of approximately 0.6 (1.3 using natural logarithms) during dredging. These results are comparable to results reported by Carruthers et al. (2002, in prep) from the monitoring of plumes of sediment in Hervey Bay, QLD.

3.1.4 Tidal Currents within East Boyd Bay

The tidal planes for the Standard Port of Eden in Twofold Bay are shown in Table 3-2 as heights above the Indian Spring Low Water (ISLW) level.

Table 3-2 Twofold Bay Tidal Planes (m ISLW)

Tidal Plane	Eden (Standard Port) m
Mean Highest High Water (MHHW)	1.6
Mean Lowest High Water (MLHW)	1.0
Mean Level (ML)	0.8
Mean Highest Low Water (MLWN)	0.6
Mean Lowest Low Water (MLWS)	0.1

The mean tidal range at Eden is 0.8 m. The spring tidal range (new and full moon) is 1.50 m. The neap tidal range (first and last quarter moon) is 0.4 m. The tidal range as measured by the InterOcean s4 current meter is shown in Figure 3-10.

Tidal velocities in East Boyd Bay were generally less than 0.1 m/s with a typical current of less than 0.05 m/s (Figure 3-11). The dominant ebb and flood directions were south easterly and north westerly, respectively (Figure 3-12).

3.2 Current and Water Quality Data at the Offshore Placement Area

3.2.1 Current Speed and Direction

Velocity plots recorded by the ADCP on the western perimeter of the offshore placement area (at arbitrary depths of 9.0 m and 49 m) are illustrated in Figure 3-13 to Figure 3-16. On the 24/4/02, the water current at the centre of the landward (western) perimeter of the placement area was approximately 0.2 m/s in a south-easterly direction. The speed and direction were reasonably consistent throughout the full depth profile, with the water speed reducing in the deepest sections of the profile. The current speed and direction measured within the placement plume on the 24/4/2002 was similar in both speed and direction to that described above.

On the 25/4/02, the water speed and direction were slightly different to the conditions measured on the preceding day at both the centre of the western perimeter of the placement area and within the placement plume. The water speed was reduced through the profile to approximately 0.1 m/s and the current direction was generally to the south, with some variation in the various bin depths between south south-east and south south-west.

At no time during the measurement period on either day did the measured currents head due west, i.e. towards the trawling grounds referred to as the 'Mud Patch'. Rather, the general direction of travel was toward the southeast on the 24/4/02 and south on the 25/4/02.

3.2.2 Water Quality

The schedule of concurrent water quality (turbidity) measurements collected during the ADCP current and backscatter records is summarised in Table 3-3. The profile of water turbidity measurements collected on each date is illustrated in Figure 3-17 and Figure 3-18. Background water turbidity on each date was less than 1 NTU prior to the commencement of placement operations. Shortly after placement of the spoil, the water turbidity was elevated in the range of 20 to 30 NTU. Turbidity was greatest in the region nearest the seabed.

The water turbidity within the placement plume decreased with time and the distance away from the original placement location, such that after approximately 1 to 1.5 hours, the water turbidity was within the range of background levels of turbidity (i.e. typically less than 2 NTU).

3.2.3 Relative Suspended Sediment and Turbidity

Backscatter intensity plots recorded by the ADCP through the plume of placed material show the relative concentration of suspended matter (as indicated by the different colours) at varying times after placement (Figure 3-19 to Figure 3-22). Note that the acoustic backscatter echo (dB) appears to have been uninterpretable by the ADCP at the centreline of the plume immediately following placement as indicated by the appearance of black segments in the record. This was caused by either the elevated levels of suspended material concentrations at the time interfering with the return signal or the entrainment of air beneath the receiver. During these sections, the survey vessel was positioned within the centreline of the plume (red arrow in Figure 3-23).

3.2.4 Visual Observations of Plume Dispersal

The sediment dispersion model done as part of the EIS for the Twofold Bay NAF predicted that plumes of sediment associated with the dredging operations would travel up to 150 m from the source, and under a regime of south-westerly winds, be dispersed in a north-easterly direction out of East Boyd Bay in an offshore direction.

A small plume of sediment was evident in the few hours following the commencement of dredging, but as predicted by the model, it did not appear to extend past the buoys located along the line of effect, i.e. Z1 and Z2. In the 2 days following the commencement of dredging, a plume was observed beyond the buoys located at Z1 and Z2 resulting in limited increases in turbidity outside the zone of effect that had been modelled previously. Notwithstanding this, as predicted by the model, the plume was being dispersed offshore in a north-easterly direction out of East Boyd Bay, and importantly, away from the beds of Posidonia located on the southern and eastern sides of the bay (WBM 2002a).

A plume of sediment associated with the dredging operation was visible in East Boyd Bay throughout the second recording period. Whilst the plume was most evident within the area being dredged, a plume of fine-grained material extended beyond the predicted zone of effect (WBM 2002b). Similarly, a plume of sediment associated with the dredging operation was visible throughout East Boyd Bay during the third and fourth reporting periods. Whilst the plume was most evident within the area being dredged, a plume of fine-grained material extended beyond the predicted zone of effect and the line of defence (WBM 2002c) toward the beds of Posidonia (WBM 2002d). This plume appeared to be moving in a north – north easterly direction away from the dredging works and tended to remain close to the shoreline at Honeysuckle Point extending into the small bay on the eastern side of Jews Head.

The aerial observations of the placement operations confirmed the pattern of plume dispersal that was evident from land, i.e. the plume was moving to the north-east past the HDA Wharf at Honeysuckle Point. At the time of the aerial observations, no plume associated with the dredging operations was observed beyond Honeysuckle Point or in other parts of Twofold Bay, although there was a plume of sediment associated with runoff adjacent to the entrance of Kiah Inlet. Similarly, a smaller plume was noted on the eastern side of East Boyd Bay adjacent to Site P2 that appeared to be associated with freshwater inputs from Fisheries Creek.

To observe the behaviour of the spoil plume at the offshore placement area, several passes using a light aircraft were made of a placement operation with a track maintained primarily to the eastern side of the dredge (Figure 3-23). The plume of sediment released by the dredge appeared to disperse from the surface within a period of approximately 10 – 15 minutes. Moreover, there was no evidence of any plume of sediment visible on the surface at the offshore placement area 1-hour after placement operations had ceased on the 24/4/02.

3.3 Inspection of Hull of the Brisbane

A list of taxa sampled from 3 different areas of the hull of the 'Brisbane' is presented in Table 3-4. It is understood that recent maintenance undertaken on the 'Brisbane' included a hull clean and an application of an anti-fouling paint during November 2001. Not surprisingly, therefore, the hull of the 'Brisbane' generally appeared to be clear of fouling organisms. There was very little biota occurring near the bow although several species of barnacles were observed on the side of the hull near the mid-ships of the dredge. As expected, very few fouling organisms were observed on the under side of the dredge particularly near the bottom dump doors (Figure 3-24). There were, however, noticeably more species, mainly barnacles and some green filamentous algae, around the stern of the ship (Figure 3-25). No fouling organisms occurred on the propellers or water outtakes/intakes of the dredge.

In total, 7 species of barnacles were identified in the samples collected from the hull of the Brisbane (Appendix C). These included 3 species common in the intertidal and subtidal regions of NSW and eastern Australia (Austrobalanus imperator, Hexaminius popeiana and Austromegabalanus nigrescens). A further 3 species have been recorded previously as fouling species from NSW and eastern Australia (Balanus amphitrite, Balanus variegatus and Megabalanus rosa) while Chelonibia patula is known as an occasional fouler but is generally considered an epizoic species, i.e. it is usually found attached to the shells of turtles. Importantly, no introduced species of barnacle was identified in the samples collected from the hull of the dredge. Other fauna included unidentified marine polychaetes from the families Nereidae and Syllidae, a small bivalve species (Modiolus victoriae) common from southern NSW to southern QLD and 3 species of encrusting bryozoans. Of the bryozoans, Watersipora subtorquata is regarded as invasive and a significant fouling organism due to its resistance to anti-fouling paints, therefore, it may provide a platform on such structures for other fouling organisms. Notwithstanding this, Watersipora subtorquata is common in estuaries in NSW, e.g. Sydney Harbour, and has been observed previously around some parts of the rocky shoreline in Twofold Bay (WBM, pers. obs, 2002). In addition, several common species of algae were identified in the samples including a brown alga (Sargassum sp.) and a green alga (Enteromorpha sp.).

4 CONCLUSIONS

In general, a plume of sediment was visible in East Boyd Bay whilst dredging operations were underway. Whilst the plume was most evident within the area being dredged, a plume of finer-grained material extended beyond the predicted zone of effect. This plume, which had a light coloration, was generally transported in a north – north easterly direction out of East Boyd Bay and tended to remain close to the shoreline at Honeysuckle Point extending into the small bay on the eastern side of Jews Head. On some occasions, the plume extended as a narrow strip in a due north direction (i.e. perpendicular to the shoreline) from Honeysuckle Point. Mean levels of turbidity were generally greatest at the line of effect (Z1 and Z2) and at the line of defence (M1 and M2) compared to the buoys deployed adjacent to the beds of Posidonia (P1 and P2) during the dredging operations. Following the completion of the dredging programme, levels of turbidity were elevated at the shallower sites compared to the deeper monitoring sites. By the end of the first week of the post-dredging period, however, mean levels of turbidity at most sites were generally within the range of 2 to 3 NTU, which was within the range of turbidity recorded in the bay prior to the commencement of dredging. Visual observations of the beds of Posidonia and the substratum near the deeper monitoring sites within East Boyd Bay on the 28/5/02, i.e. 2 weeks after dredging had finished, indicated that there was no short-term smothering of the Posidonia. Shoots within the beds ranged in length from approximately 20 cm to 40 cm. Furthermore, the substratum within each of the beds was firm when disturbed by hand and was dominated by coarse, sand material.

Monitoring of the current direction and dispersal of the spoil associated with placement operations indicated that the placed material was being dispersed toward the south of the placement area. It was considered unlikely, therefore, that dumping operations would result in any short-term movement of dredged material towards the 'Mud Patch' situated to the west of placement operations. On this basis, short-term effects on nearby commercial trawling grounds, e.g. smothering with sand, were not predicted. Notwithstanding this, monitoring of the effects of placement operations on benthic assemblages is recommended. Similarly, no ecological effects were expected from any fouling biota associated with the hull of the dredge given that a total of 18 taxa were identified in samples collected from the hull with the majority of taxa considered to be typical of fouling organisms from temperate Australian waters.

1 INTRODUCTION

1.1 Background and Aims

The Twofold Bay Naval Ammunitioning Facility (NAF) involves the staged construction of a vessel turning basin, wharf and jetty on the southern side of Twofold Bay (within East Boyd Bay), opposite the town of Eden in southern NSW (Figure 1.1). The first stage of works involves dredging approximately 170,000m^3 of material from the seabed of East Boyd Bay within the boundary of the turning basin, which adjoins the proposed wharf. Principal contractors Baulderstone Hornibrook Ltd awarded the dredging contract to the Port of Brisbane Corporation. Baulderstone Hornibrook Ltd is responsible for further stages of work involving construction of the wharf and jetty.

It is estimated that approximately 4 - 6 weeks would be required for completion of the dredging contract using the trailing-arm, suction dredge, the "Brisbane". The aim of the dredging programme is to attain a design bed level –11 m AHD within the turning basin. Disposal of the material removed from East Boyd Bay is at an offshore placement area situated 3 nautical miles east of Eden. Representations from local commercial fisherman resulted in an extension to the designated placement area so as to provide a greater buffer between placement operations and inshore trawling areas. The offshore placement area is 3 nautical miles long by 1.5 nautical miles wide.

Environmental monitoring is a key component of the dredging contract being administered by the Port of Brisbane Corporation. Modelling done for the EIS predicted that the impacts of the dredging operation would largely be confined to the area of East Boyd Bay. Importantly, studies done as part of the EIS identified areas of seagrass within East Boyd Bay and recommended measures to mitigate the effects of the proposed works on seagrasses including monitoring during construction and operational phases of the project. Furthermore, it was recommended that water quality attributes such as turbidity and photosynthetically available radiation (PAR) be monitored prior to and during the dredging works.

WBM Oceanics Australia was commissioned by the Port of Brisbane Corporation to undertake monitoring of the water quality within East Boyd Bay during the dredging of the turning basin for the Twofold Bay NAF. Specifically, WBM Oceanics aimed to:

- Deploy subtidal water quality loggers adjacent to the proposed dredging operation to examine a snapshot of natural levels of turbidity in the weeks prior to the commencement of dredging;
- Deploy real-time turbidity buoys at each of 7 locations adjacent to the dredging operation in East Boyd Bay; and
- Establish a receiving station at the site office of Baulderstone Hornibrook.

This preliminary report presents a qualitative summary of the turbidity data only collected in the period prior to the commencement of dredging (2 weeks for the water quality loggers and several days for the real-time turbidity buoys) and during the initial stages of the dredging campaign (23-25/4/02). It includes data collected by each of the real-time turbidity buoys from their deployment prior to dredging to midday on the 25/4/02.

Notes: Area in red indicates proposed dredging area. Locations P1 and P2 in East Boyd Bay, represent water quality monitoring locations adjacent to beds of Posidonia. Locations Z1, Z2, M1, M2, M3 represent near-impact and middle-distance water quality monitoring locations. S4 current meter was positioned at Location Z1. Yeokal water quality instruments were positioned at locations P1 and P2.

2 STUDY METHODS

2.1 Dredging Operations in East Boyd Bay

2.1.1 Water Quality

Water quality measurements in a 2-4 week period prior to dredging were collected using 2 Yeo-kal 612 water quality instruments. These instruments were deployed by divers and positioned approximately 0.5 m above the seabed adjacent to the 2 beds of Posidonia in East Boyd Bay during March 2002. Each water quality meter was programmed to record and measure a range of water quality variables every 0.5 hours. These included water temperature (°C), conductivity (mS/cm), salinity (g/L), dissolved oxygen (mg/L and % saturation), pH, redox (mV) and turbidity (NTU).

2.1.2 Real-time Turbidity Buoys

A component of the environmental monitoring programme in East Boyd Bay comprises the real-time measurement of turbidity using an array of 7 buoys each equipped with on-board turbidity measuring, transmitting and data-logging equipment. Two buoys were deployed adjacent to the beds of Posidonia in East Boyd Bay (P1 and P2) with the remainder placed along each of 2 lines with increasing distance away from the dredging works, i.e. a line of effect (Z1 and Z2) and a line of defence (M1 – M3) (Table 2.1). Buoys Z1 and Z2 were located approximately 150 m from the dredging operation while Buoys M1 – M3 extended in an arc approximately 100-150 m south east of Z1 and Z2. Levels of turbidity were measured and recorded every 15 minutes at the shore receiving station as well as being logged internally within each buoy. The real-time turbidity data, which is transmitted to the site office, is monitored 24 hours by staff of Baulderstone Hornibrook.

3 RESULTS

3.1 Dredging Operations in East Boyd Bay

Dredging within East Boyd Bay commenced at approximately 0830 hours on 23 April 2002. The Brisbane operates within the turning basin for approximately 1.5 hours before heading to the offshore placement area. The trip to the placement area takes between 1.5 to 2 hours giving a total dredging cycle of between 3 –3.5 hours. A total of 13 dredging runs had been completed by the dredge at the time that the turbidity data was downloaded from the loggers at midday on the 25/4/02. Dredging had been underway for over 48 hours at the time of the download.

3.1.1 Water Quality

In the weeks prior to dredging, turbidity at Sites P1 and P2 generally ranged from 1 to 5 ntu and 1 to 9 ntu, respectively (Figure 3.1). Levels of turbidity at both sites appeared to increase slightly in the period immediately before dredging commenced, which was probably due to runoff associated with several days of heavy rain. Levels of turbidity were elevated slightly (range of 5 to 10 ntu) following the commencement of dredging on 23/4/03 (red arrow on Figure 3.1) but were within the range of turbidity measured previously, i.e. background levels. Raw data from the seven sites is included in Appendix A.

3.1.2 Real-time Turbidity Buoys

Deployment of the buoys was done from 17-19/4/02 and all were fully operational by 22/4/02. Weather conditions during the deployment were generally considered poor with several days of heavy rain and a gale-force wind warning in place for 20-21/4/02. Visual inspections of the buoys by scuba divers during this time noted a freshwater lens extending to a depth of approximately 0.5 m on the surface within East Boyd Bay. Mean levels of turbidity (±standard error) during this period (before dredging) at the buoys deployed in the deeper water, i.e. Z1 and Z2, generally ranged from 0.5 ± 0.2 ntu up to a maximum of approximately 4.0 ± 2.6 ntu (Table 3). For the buoys deployed along the line of defence, i.e. M1 – M3, mean turbidity ranged from approximately 0.6 ± 0.2 ntu to approximately 15 ± 1.0 ntu (see M3 at 1400 on 17/4/02, Table 3). Mean levels of turbidity at the sites adjacent to the Posidonia in East Boyd Bay ranged from approximately 1.0 ± 0.1 ntu to approximately 8.0 ± 0.8 ntu.

Dredging within East Boyd Bay commenced at 0830 hours on the 23/4/02 (indicated with a red arrow on Figure 3.2 and Figure 3.3). As expected, the mean turbidity at the 2 buoys nearest the dredging operation increased gradually to a range of approximately 2.2 ± 0.6 ntu to 12.5 ± 2.0 ntu, although the occasional peak, e.g. 24.6 ± 7.9 ntu, was recorded. For the buoys deployed along the line of defence, mean turbidity increased to a range of approximately 3.0 ± 0.5 ntu to 10.5 ± 3.6 ntu, however, some elevated levels (e.g. 70 ± 42 ntu, Figure 3.3) were recorded at one of the sites (M3) toward the end of the first recording period. Mean levels of turbidity at the 2 beds of Posidonia ranged from approximately 1.0 ± 0.2 ntu to 7.5 ± 2.0 ntu in the days following the commencement of dredging. This appeared to show no adverse effects of the dredging operations on the beds of Posidonia. Moreover, the range of turbidity measured after dredging commenced at Sites P1 and P2 was within the range (i.e. background) recorded prior to the start of the dredging works (Figure 3.3).

3.1.3 Dispersal of Plume of Sediment Associated with Dredging Operations

The sediment dispersion model done as part of the EIS for the Twofold Bay NAF predicted that plumes of sediment associated with the dredging operations would travel up to 150 m from the source, and under a regime of south-westerly winds, be dispersed in a north-easterly direction out of East Boyd Bay in an offshore direction.

Visual observations were made of the dredging operations by air and from land to examine the behaviour of the dredging plume. A small plume of sediment was evident in the few hours following the commencement of dredging, but as predicted by the model, it did not appear to extend past the buoys located along the line of effect, i.e. Z1 and Z2. In the 2 days following the commencement of dredging, a plume was observed beyond the buoys located at Z1 and Z2 resulting in limited increases in turbidity outside the zone of effect that had been modelled previously. Notwithstanding this, as predicted by the model, the plume was being dispersed offshore in a north-easterly direction out of East Boyd Bay, and importantly, away from the beds of Posidonia located on the southern and eastern sides of the bay.

A Cessna 172 was chartered from Merimbula Air Services on the 24/4/02 to make aerial observations of the dredging operation in East Boyd Bay and of the placement operations located 3 nautical miles offshore. These aerial observations confirmed the pattern of plume dispersal that was evident from land, i.e. the plume was moving to the north-east past the HDA woodchip facility at Honeysuckle Point. No plume was observed beyond Honeysuckle Point or in other parts of Twofold Bay, although there was a plume of runoff near the entrance to Kiah Inlet. A smaller plume was noted on the eastern side of East Boyd Bay adjacent to Site P2 that appeared to be associated with freshwater inputs from Fisheries Creek.

4 CONCLUSIONS

The water quality loggers were deployed successfully adjacent to the beds of Posidonia in East Boyd Bay in March 2002. These have now been retrieved and the data downloaded to electronic files. In addition, 7 real-time turbidity buoys have been deployed successfully using GPS co-ordinates as supplied to WBM Oceanics. These buoys continue to transmit real-time data to the receiving station established at the Baulderstone Hornibrook site office. Of particular interest, both the Yeo-kal water quality meters and the real-time turbidity buoys recorded levels of turbidity that appeared to be elevated compared to the limited data that were collected prior to the commencement of dredging.

Few actions were required during the initial stages of the dredging campaign although some elevated levels of turbidity were recorded at M3 at around 2000 hours on the 23/4/02, which were cause for concern. The elevated levels of turbidity (20 – 70 ntu) occurred when the dredge was leaving the bay on its way to the offshore placement area and initially it was thought that these levels were associated with propeller wash. The issue was raised with representatives from the Port of Brisbane Corporation on the 23/4/02 and it was agreed that the dredge would leave the site at a reduced speed so as to minimise the amount of sediment mobilised by the propellers. In addition, an inspection of Buoy M3 by scuba divers revealed that it was located close to patches the rocky reef and it was thought that its close proximity to Bilgalera Point, and any associated wave activity, may have been contributing to the elevated levels recorded there. It was decided, therefore, that the buoy should be moved away from the reef and toward the dredging works to gain more representative results. Buoy M3 was moved approximately 20 m due north on the 24/4/02.

Overall, mean levels of turbidity at each of the 7 sites was generally considered low prior to the dredging works. Following the commencement of dredging (to the end of the first reporting period on 25/4/02), mean levels of turbidity generally remained in the range of 8 to 12 ntu. With the exception of some of the levels recorded at M3, these levels could be considered to be within the background range of turbidity for East Boyd Bay. Initial visual observations of the behaviour of the plume of sediment associated with the dredging operations appear to concur with the predictions on dispersal made in the EIS. During the first 2 days of dredging, the plume generally appeared to remain within the zone of effect and was being transported in a north-east direction out of East Boyd Bay and away from the beds of Posidonia.

1 INTRODUCTION

A detailed summary of the background and methods used to monitor levels of turbidity adjacent to the dredging operation in East Boyd Bay, as part of the construction of the Twofold Bay Naval Ammunitioning Facility (NAF), were provided in a earlier report to Baulderstone Hornibrook (WBM, 2002). Briefly, the Twofold Bay NAF involves the construction of a vessel turning basin, wharf and jetty on the southern side of Twofold Bay within East Boyd Bay. The first stage of works involves dredging approximately 170,000m^3 of material from the seabed of East Boyd Bay within the boundary of the turning basin, which adjoins the proposed wharf. The aim of the dredging programme is to attain a design bed level –11 m AHD within the turning basin. Disposal of the material removed from East Boyd Bay is at an offshore placement area situated 3 nautical miles east of Eden.

Conditions of the licence issued to Baulderstone Hornibrook by the NSW EPA included the requirement to submit weekly reports on the monitoring of levels of turbidity in East Boyd Bay. The first reporting period summarised background and real-time data collected prior to the commencement of dredging and during the initial stages of the dredging programme to midday on the 25/4/02. This report summarises the real-time turbidity data collected by each of 7 monitoring buoys (Figure 1.1) located within East Boyd Bay during the period 25/4/2002 to 1/5/2002.

2 METHODS

2.1 Turbidity in East Boyd Bay

Monitoring of levels of turbidity adjacent to the dredging operation in East Boyd Bay continued using the real-time turbidity buoys deployed at the positions described previously (WBM, 2002). With the exception of Buoy M3, all buoys remained in their original positions and continued to successfully transmit data to the receiving station. On the 25/4/02, it was noticed that the data being transmitted by Buoy M3 was erratic, and in some instances, negative levels of turbidity were reported. Therefore, Buoy M3 was removed from the water on the 25/4/02 so that the problem could be further investigated. The turbidity sensor was removed from the buoy and sent to the manufacturer for a more complete examination. Thus, no data was collected by Buoy M3 for the current reporting period, however, a new sensor has been connected to the buoy and it was re-deployed adjacent to the dredging works.

3.1 Turbidity in East Boyd Bay

A total of 42 dredging runs were completed by the "Brisbane" during the reporting period from 25/4/02 to the 1/5/02. In general, mean levels of turbidity were greatest at the line of effect (Z1 and Z2) compared to the buoys deployed along the line of defence (M1 and M2) and adjacent to the beds of Posidonia (P1 and P2) (Figure 2.1). For example, when mean levels of turbidity were within the range of 25 – 40 NTU, it was usually the case that mean levels of turbidity at the Posidonia sites were within the range of 8 – 14 NTU (Figure 3.1). A summary of the mean levels of turbidity recorded by each of the buoys during a 6 hour period for each day is provided in Table 1 (Appendix A). At Buoy P1, mean levels of turbidity ranged from 3 $\pm$ 0.1 NTU on the morning of 27/4/02 up to approximately 15 $\pm$ 0.7 NTU during the afternoon of 1/5/02. Similarly, at Buoy P2, mean levels of turbidity ranged from approximately 2 $\pm$ 0.1 NTU on the morning of 27/4/02 up to approximately 11 $\pm$ 0.2 NTU on the morning of 29/4/02. As expected, greatest levels of mean turbidity were recorded at Buoys Z1 and Z2, which are located approximately 150 m from the eastern boundary of the dredging works. Mean turbidity at Buoy Z2 was greatest during 1200 – 1800 hours on the 1/5/02 (38.9 $\pm$ 5.8 NTU), while at Buoy Z1, the greatest mean level of turbidity occurred during 0000 – 0600 hours on the 30/4/02 (30.9 $\pm$ 3.3 NTU). For the buoys deployed along the line of defence, greatest mean levels of turbidity, i.e. 22.3 $\pm$ 2.5 and 32.9 $\pm$ 5.9 NTU at M1 and M2, respectively, occurred during 0000 – 0600 hours on the 1/5/02.

4 CONCLUSIONS

As expected a plume of sediment associated with the dredging operation was visible in East Boyd Bay throughout the recording period from 25/4/02 to 1/5/02. Whilst the plume was most evident within the area being dredged, a plume of finer-grained material extended beyond the predicted zone of effect on the 28/4/02. At the time, the Master of dredge reported that an area of hard clay had been encountered at the southern end of the turning basin. No impact at the beds of Posidonia was identified from the plume.

Monitoring of the turbidity gauges by Baulderstone Hornibrook continued at the site office. On some occasions, levels of turbidity recorded by the buoys along the line of effect reached levels that on-site staff deemed as requiring changes to dredging operations. For example, on the morning of the 28/4/02, a mean level of turbidity of approximately 70 NTU was recorded at Buoy Z2. It was noted that the dredge was working close to the south-east end of the turning basin at the time this level was recorded. The Master of the dredge and staff from the Port of Brisbane were notified and it was decided that the dredge should move to the western side of the turning basin until the levels of turbidity at Buoy Z2 had decreased. Similarly, elevated levels of turbidity at Buoy Z2 required action on the 30/4/02 and 1/5/02. On both occasions, it was requested that the dredge move to the western side of the turning basin, i.e. away from the seagrass to the south and east, to allow levels of turbidity to decrease.

In general, the plume was behaving as predicted by the sediment dispersion model, i.e. no coarse-grained sediments appeared to be moving beyond the zone of effect although a plume of fine material was evident the bay. Importantly, however, the plume was being transported to the north-east in an offshore direction out of East Boyd Bay and away from the beds of Posidonia. As with the previous reporting period (see WBM, 2002), the plume of fine material extended past the HDA woodchip facility toward a smaller bay on the eastern side of East Boyd Bay. Again, no plumes of sediment associated with the dredging works were observed in other parts of Twofold Bay. Overall, whilst elevated levels of turbidity were recorded at the line of effect, the same levels were not recorded at the buoys adjacent to the beds Posidonia suggesting that there had been some settling and/or movement of the plume away from the seagrass in the southern area of East Boyd Bay. Importantly, mean levels of turbidity at Sites P1 and P2 continue to remain within the background levels that were recorded previously.

Visual inspections of the each of the beds of Posidonia were done on several occasions during the reporting period. The seagrass within each bed was dense and shoots ranged in length from approximately 20 – 60 cm. Moreover, the seagrass appeared healthy and few epiphytes (i.e. algae or other biota attached to the surfaces of the shoots) were noted. There did not appear to be any evidence that the seagrasses were being smothered by sediment mobilised by the dredging works.

1 INTRODUCTION

A detailed summary of the background and methods used to monitor levels of turbidity adjacent to the dredging operation in East Boyd Bay, as part of the construction of the Twofold Bay Naval Ammunitioning Facility (NAF), were provided in earlier reports to Baulderstone Hornibrook (WBM, 2002a and 2002b). Conditions of the licence issued to Baulderstone Hornibrook by the NSW EPA included the requirement of weekly reports summarising the monitoring of levels of turbidity in East Boyd Bay.

The first reporting period from the 23/3/02 to the 25/4/02 included data collected by water quality loggers and the real-time turbidity buoys prior to the commencement of dredging (i.e. a limited snapshot of background levels) and the initial stages of the dredging programme. Levels of turbidity in East Boyd Bay were considered low prior to the commencement of dredging. Following the start of dredging (to the end of the first reporting period), mean levels of turbidity generally remained in the range of 8 to 12 NTU, which was considered to be within the background range of turbidity for East Boyd Bay (WBM, 2002a). Visual observations of the sediment plume indicated that it was generally behaving as predicted by the sediment dispersion model outlined in the EIS, i.e. it appeared to remain within the zone of effect and was moving in an offshore direction to the north-east out of East Boyd Bay and away from the beds of Posidonia (WBM, 2002a).

For the second reporting period, mean levels of turbidity were greatest at the line of effect (Z1 and Z2) compared with the buoys deployed along the line of defence (M1 and M2) and adjacent to the beds of Posidonia (P1 and P2). When mean levels of turbidity were within the range of 25 – 40 NTU at Z1 and Z2, mean levels of turbidity at the Posidonia sites were generally within the range of 8 – 14 NTU (WBM, 2002b). A plume of sediment associated with the dredging operation was visible in East Boyd Bay throughout the second recording period. Whilst the plume was most evident within the area being dredged, a plume of finer-grained material extended beyond the predicted zone of effect (WBM, 2002b).

This report summarises the data collected by each of 7 real-time turbidity monitoring buoys (Fig. 1.1) located adjacent to the dredging operation in East Boyd Bay during the period 1/5/2002 to 7/5/2002.

2 METHODS

2.1 Monitoring Levels of Turbidity in East Boyd Bay

Monitoring of levels of turbidity adjacent to the dredging operation in East Boyd Bay continued using the real-time turbidity buoys deployed at the positions described previously (WBM, 2002a). With the exception of buoy M3, all buoys remained in their original positions and continued to successfully transmit data to the receiving station located in the Baulderstone Hornibrook site office. Buoy M3 was removed from the water during the second reporting period to investigate a problem with the turbidity sensor. A new sensor was fitted to the buoy and it was re-deployed in East Boyd Bay at midday on the 5/5/02. Therefore, only data collected from the 5 – 7/5/02 are summarised for buoy M3.

3.1 Monitoring Levels of Turbidity in East Boyd Bay

The trailer suction dredger "Brisbane" completed a total of 29 dredging/placement cycles during the reporting period from 1/5/02 to the 7/5/02. In general, mean levels of turbidity were greatest at the line of effect (buoys Z1 and Z2) and at the line of defence (buoys M1 and M2) compared to the buoys deployed adjacent to the beds of Posidonia (P1 and P2) (Fig. 3.1). A summary of the mean levels of turbidity recorded by each of the buoys for each 6 hour block of the deployment period is provided in Table 1.

At buoy P1, mean levels of turbidity ranged from 6 ± 0.1 NTU during the evening of the 6/5/02 up to 17.9 ± 0.4 NTU during the morning of the 7/5/02. Similarly, at buoy P2, mean levels of turbidity ranged from 7.4 ± 0.2 NTU on the morning of 2/5/02 up to 16.4 ± 0.4 NTU on the morning of 5/5/02 (Fig. 3.2). Highest mean turbidity levels were recorded at buoys Z1 and Z2 located approximately 150 m from the eastern boundary of the dredging works. Mean turbidity at buoy Z1 ranged from 11.1 ± 0.5 NTU to 36.6 ± 2.8 NTU, while at buoy Z2, levels ranged from 17.1 ± 1.5 NTU to 47.2 ± 5.6 NTU. Along the line of defence, i.e. buoys M1, M2 and M3, levels ranged from 7.8 ± 0.4 to 27 ± 2.8 NTU, 7.1 ± 0.3 to 32.9 ±5.9 NTU and 8.4 ± 1.2 to 33.1 + 1.5 NTU, respectively.

4 CONCLUSIONS

Similar to the second reporting period, a plume of sediment associated with the dredging operation was visible in East Boyd Bay from 1/5 – 7/5/02. Whilst the plume was most evident within the area being dredged, a plume of finer-grained material extended beyond the predicted zone of effect and the line of defence. This plume, which had a pale white coloration, was generally moving in a north – northeasterly direction out of East Boyd Bay, close to the shoreline toward Honeysuckle Point and into the small bay on the eastern side of Jews Head. On some occasions, a narrow plume extended for an approximate distance of 1 km due north of Honeysuckle Point.

Monitoring of the turbidity gauges by Baulderstone Hornibrook continued at the site office. Staff from the Port of Brisbane contacted the site office at around 0600 hours on the 2/5/02 to advise that an area of hard clay had been encountered within the dredge area and that levels of turbidity at all buoys should be monitored closely, in case changes to the dredging programme were required. At approximately 0200 hours on the 3/5/02, turbidity at the buoys within the line of defence (buoys M1, M2) reached levels that on-site staff considered would require changes to the dredging operations. The master of the dredge and staff from the Port of Brisbane were notified and the dredge was moved immediately to the western side of the turning basin. Similarly, at approximately 2200 hours on the 4/5/02, the dredge was asked to move to the seaward side of the turning basin when levels of turbidity became elevated at Buoy P1 (approximately 25.5 NTU).

A pipe on one of the dredge arms was damaged at approximately 1000 hours on the 5/5/02 requiring repairs alongside the wharf in Eden on the 6/5/02. Prior to the dredge returning to Eden, turbidity at all buoys ranged from approximately 11 NTU (buoy P2) to 33 NTU (buoy Z2). In the 6 hours that the dredge was alongside in Eden, turbidity levels at all buoys reduced to below 10 NTU.

1 INTRODUCTION

Levels of turbidity adjacent to the dredging operation in East Boyd Bay are currently being monitored as part of the construction of the Twofold Bay Naval Ammunitioning Facility (NAF). Specific details of the monitoring programme are provided in weekly reports to the NSW EPA summarising the monitoring of levels of turbidity in the bay (WBM, 2002a, 2002b, 2002c). The first reporting period from the 23/3/02 to the 25/4/02 included data collected by water quality loggers and the real-time turbidity buoys prior to the commencement of dredging (i.e. a limited snapshot of background levels) and the initial stages of the dredging programme. Levels of turbidity in East Boyd Bay were considered low prior to the commencement of dredging. Following the start of dredging (23/5/02), mean levels of turbidity generally remained in the range of 8 to 12 NTU, which was considered to be within the background range of turbidity for East Boyd Bay (WBM, 2002a). Visual observations of the sediment plume during the first 2 days of dredging indicated that it was generally behaving as predicted by the sediment dispersion model outlined in the EIS, i.e. it appeared to remain within the zone of effect and was moving in an offshore direction to the north-east out of East Boyd Bay and away from the beds of Posidonia (WBM, 2002a). For the second reporting period (25/4/02 – 1/5/02), mean levels of turbidity were greatest at the line of effect (Z1 and Z2) compared to the buoys deployed along the line of defence (M1 and M2) and adjacent to the beds of Posidonia (P1 and P2). When mean levels of turbidity were within the range of 25 – 40 NTU at Buoys Z1 and Z2, it was usually the case that mean levels of turbidity at the Posidonia sites were within the range of 8 – 14 NTU (WBM, 2002b). A plume of sediment associated with the dredging operation was visible in East Boyd Bay throughout the second recording period. Whilst the plume was most evident within the area being dredged, a plume of finer-grained material extended beyond the predicted zone of effect (WBM, 2002b). Similarly for the third reporting period (1/5/02 – 7/5/02), mean levels of turbidity remained greatest at the line of effect and at the line of defence compared to the buoys deployed adjacent to the beds of Posidonia (WBM 2002c). Again, a plume of sediment associated with the dredging operation was visible in the bay during the third reporting period. Whilst the plume was most evident within the area being dredged, a plume of finer-grained material extended beyond the predicted zone of effect and the line of defence (WBM 2002c). This plume appeared to be moving in a north – north easterly direction away from the dredging works and tended to remain close to the shoreline at Honeysuckle Point extending into the small bay on the eastern side of Jews Head.

This report summarises the data collected by each of 7 real-time turbidity monitoring buoys (Fig. 1.1) located adjacent to the dredging operation in East Boyd Bay during the period 7/5/2002 to 14/5/2002.

2.1 Monitoring Levels of Turbidity in East Boyd Bay

Monitoring of levels of turbidity adjacent to the dredging operation in East Boyd Bay continued using the real-time turbidity buoys deployed at the positions described previously (WBM, 2002a). All buoys remained in their original positions and continued to successfully transmit data to the receiving station located in the Baulderstone Hornibrook site office. No technical problems were reported for any of the buoys during the reporting period.

3 RESULTS

The weather from the 7/5/02 to 9/5/02 was generally fine and clear with occasional light winds although intermittent rain was reported on the evening of the 9/5/02 to approximately midday on the 10/5/02. Weather conditions remained calm but overcast following the rain on the 10/5/02 through to the 14/5/02.

A summary of the real-time turbidity data collected from 7/5/02 through 14/5/02 (data was downloaded at approximately 1700 hours) is presented below. Dredging operations in East Boyd Bay continued during this time although it is understood that all dredging work ceased at approximately 1130 hours on the 14/5/02. Therefore, some data are summarised for the first 6 hours of the post-dredging period.

3.1 Monitoring Levels of Turbidity in East Boyd Bay

In total, the "Brisbane" completed 17 dredging runs during the reporting period. In general, mean levels of turbidity were greatest at the line of effect (Z1 and Z2) and at the line of defence (M1 and M2) compared to the buoys deployed adjacent to the beds of Posidonia (P1 and P2) (Fig. 3.1). A summary of the mean levels of turbidity recorded by each of the buoys during a 6 hour period for each day is provided in Table 1. At Buoy P1, mean levels of turbidity ranged from 4.6 $\pm$ 0.1 NTU during the morning of the 10/5/02 to 23.9 $\pm$ 1.4 NTU during the morning of the 8/5/02. Similarly, at Buoy P2, mean levels of turbidity ranged from 4.9 $\pm$ 0.1 NTU on the morning of 10/5/02 up to 16.2 $\pm$ 0.6 NTU on the morning of 8/5/02 (Fig. 3.2). Again, greatest levels of mean turbidity were recorded at Buoys Z1 and Z2 located nearest to the eastern boundary of the dredging works. Mean turbidity at Buoy Z1 ranged from 8.6 $\pm$ 0.6 NTU to 42.4 $\pm$ 2.9 NTU, while at Buoy Z2, levels ranged from 8.7 $\pm$ 0.4 NTU to 62.7 $\pm$ 3.1 NTU. Along the line of defence, i.e. Buoys M1, M2 and M3, levels ranged from 3.4 $\pm$ 0.1 to 32 $\pm$ 3.4 NTU, 5 $\pm$ 0.4 to 27 $\pm$2.3 NTU and 9.1 $\pm$ 0.8 to 35.7 $\pm$ 1.4 NTU, respectively.

Levels of turbidity recorded following the completion of dredging operations are summarised in Table 1. For the first 6 hours of the post-dredging period, levels of turbidity at the beds of Posidonia were elevated compared to the buoys deployed along the line of defence, i.e. nearest the dredging works. Mean turbidity at Sites P1 and P2 was 10.9 + 1.0 NTU and 11.3 +0.4, respectively, compared to 8.8 $\pm$ 0.2 (Z1) and 9.8 $\pm$ 0.8 NTU (Z2).

Red arrow indicates commencement of dredging. Yeokal 1 = water quality logger deployed at Site P1 on 24/3/02, Yeokal 2 = water quality logger deployed at Site P2 on 4/4/02.

4 CONCLUSIONS

A plume of sediment associated with the dredging operation was visible throughout East Boyd Bay from 7 – 14/5/02. Whilst the plume was most evident within the area being dredged, a plume of finer-grained material extended beyond the predicted zone of effect. This plume, which had a light coloration, was generally moving in a north – north easterly direction out of East Boyd Bay and tended to remain close to the shoreline at Honeysuckle Point extending into the small bay on the eastern side of Jews Head. As described previously (see WBM 2002c), on some occasions, the plume extended as a narrow strip in a due north direction (i.e. perpendicular to the shoreline) from Honeysuckle Point.

Monitoring of the turbidity gauges by Baulderstone Hornibrook continued at the site office. At approximately 0400 hours on the 8/5/02, turbidity at the buoys reached levels that on-site staff deemed as requiring changes to dredging operations. The Master of the dredge and staff from the Port of Brisbane were notified and the dredge moved to the western side of the turning basin. At approximately 0600 on the 8/5/02, the site office reported back to the Master of the dredge that these changes (i.e. moving away from the shoreline) had resulted in a lowering of turbidity at the buoys.

Dredging operations ceased at approximately 1130 hours on the 14/5/02. Mean levels of turbidity at Buoys Z1, Z2 and M2, had decreased by approximately half in the 6 hour period post dredging (i.e. afternoon of the 14/5/02) compared to the previous 6 hour period (i.e. morning of the 14/5/02).

APPENDIX C: IDENTIFICATIONS OF BARNACLES FROM 'BRISBANE'

Barnacle Identifications

Job No. 14133

Species Identified by Diana S. Jones
Science and Culture
Western Australian Museum
Francis Street
PERTH WA 6000

A total of 7 species occur in the samples taken from submarines (Table 1). The barnacles are typical fouling species of the cooler warm temperate/ temperate waters of Australia and are all sessile balanomorphan species (Appendix 1). All species have been recorded previously as foulers from Australian waters (Jones 1992a, 1992b; Jones & Hewitt 1997). No introduced barnacle species were found in the samples inspected.

The cirripede fauna identified from the samples contains the following elements:

1. Common NSW/eastern Australian inter-tidal and shallow water species, also known as occasional foulers:

Austrobalanus imperator
Hexaminius popeiana
Austromegabalanus nigrescens

2. Fouling species (all previously recorded as fouling species from NSW/eastern Australian waters):

Balanus amphitrite
Balanus variegatus
Megabalanus rosa

3. Epizoic species, usually attached to animate substrates but also known as occasional foulers:

Chelonibia patula
